

Greta Van Susteren's FOX network program showed the Zapruder film of the moment JFK was hit in the head and an autopsy photo on the 40th anniversary of the assassination. This program was late enough that few children may have been watching, but I don't see the need for either of these horrific and violent images of a murder to be aired through a indiscriminate, mass medium like tv that one can "happen" upon by simply flipping channels, etc. That is the nature of tv, therefore, it is not an appropriate medium for everything, and broadcasters have lost sight of that.
